

Earsketch Song

(11/10/11)

Well, I loved this whole experience, but I particularly loved coding my song. I had a few ideas in mind of what my song was going to be in the beginning, but my song now turned out to be not one of those ideas, it turned out way better than I thought, and hope to place in the big earsketch contest.

I enjoyed making my song. We learned a lot about coding and music, but we also learned about equity, and how that can be spread through music. I wanted my music to not only help spread the idea of racial equity, but to also help people feel empowered and inspired to spread that message themselves. I wanted my song to inspire people to be free, to be strong, and to stand up for what matters to them. Even by doing that, you're being an entrepreneur, and that's the message that I wanted to spread with my song. That's what my song meant to me.
